According to him, over the past three decades, the People's Republic of China and the Republic of Uzbekistan have become reliable partners for each other. During this time, bilateral relations have developed dynamically and at the moment they are at the highest level.

As Sanjar Valiev noted, today China ranks first among trade partners and investors in Uzbekistan, is one of the most attractive places for higher education for Uzbek youth. The dynamic process of expanding bilateral cooperation continues, "despite the pandemic and other difficulties presented by the realities of the international situation."

This, the deputy director of the ISMI emphasized, is largely due to the personal efforts and special attention of the leaders of the countries, President Shavkat Mirziyoyev and Chairman Xi Jinping. The continuous and trusting dialogue built between them acts as a guarantor and an unshakable basis for new achievements in relations between Uzbekistan and China.

The symposium participants also noted the importance of developing humanitarian cooperation at the level of the peoples of the two countries, building up cooperation ties between business circles, as well as developing multifaceted inter-sectoral cooperation.
